Officials ring up calls, WSU pays

Looming cuts in higher education and a relatively small Pac-10 budget leave the WSU athletic department in a position where austerity is bliss.

Even though Athletic Director Jim Livengood publicly preaches penny-pinching in his department, the official said he has few qualms about personal phone calls paid for by university funds, and it shows when the phone charges are examined.

"All of the coaches know we are trying to make sure we are not using phones outlandishly," he said. "I don't get concerned unless an absolutely blatant misuse is brought to my attention."

John Nelson, business manager for the department and supervisor of long distance calls, said he didn't view the unwritten department policy the same way. He likened it to telling employees not to take company pens and pencils home.

"Do you have to tell people that the phones are for business purposes only?" he asked rhetorically. "People should know what is business and what isn't business. The policy is: The long distance codes are for business calls only. Period."

But Livengood freely admits calling his parents in Quincy, Wash., "two to three times" and charging it to the university's bill. In actuality, from May 1992 to February 1993, WSU paid for almost $80 of Livengood's calls — just to his parent's home. His calls to friends and other family just add to the bill.

As goes the leader, so goes the followers.

Nearly every coach in the department had calls to family, friends or both billed to the university during that time period.

Men's basketball coach Kelvin Sampson made more than $300 in calls to his parents in Pembroke, N.C., during those same ten months, and tacked on another $40 in calls to Lisa Borla in Las Vegas, Nev., — including a call that started at 12:24 a.m. and ended at 1:48 a.m., lasting 84 minutes at more than $20, and four calls on Sept. 8 ranging from 16 to 34 minutes, almost another $20.

Again, WSU picked up the bill. Borla said she and Sampson are good friends.

Sampson was called several times to comment, and Livengood promised a week ago that he would have the coach contact The Daily Evergreen. However, Sampson did not reach the paper despite several messages.

Even though Utah is far from a recruiting hot bed and the only player on the team from that area is his son, football coach Mike Price made 133 calls to the Beehive state in those 10 months. He had coached at Weber State in Ogden, Utah, for eight years.

Including his personal "friend, not an enemy or anything" Tom Carlson and "faculty friend from Weber" Lee Jones, the fourth-year coach called the cities of Ogden, Salt Lake, St. George, Logan, Clearfield, Park City, Ephraim, Provo, Holladay and Murray for more than $175 total.

Budget sends legislators into overtime

By JENNIFER JONES

Daily Evergreen Staff

Legislators are still in Olympia — at a cost of about $18,000 a day for taxpayers. Business wasn't concluded when the end of the 105-day session was reached, causing legislators to stay late.

The budget, which is the main stumbling block causing the delay, is expected Wednesday.

However, legislators managed to approve a health care conference report and send SB5304 to the governor, a bill that would provide health care to all Washington residents through state-regulated managed competition.

The bill states that basic health care insurance coverage will be phased in between July 1993 and mid-1999 for all Washington residents, and cost controls will be imposed on the industry.

All companies are required to pay at least 50 percent of the cost of coverage for employees and their dependents, starting with the biggest companies in mid-1995 and the smallest by mid-1999. Unemployed people and their children would be covered by programs partly financed with new taxes on the health care industry, tobacco and alcohol.

Minimum benefits include routine and emergency care, preventive services, therapeutic drugs, maternity and child care, some mental health treatment and chemical dependency treatment. Other benefits can be offered by companies or purchased by individuals.

The money for the new program will come from the nearly $500 million a year raised by 1999 in new tobacco, liquor and beer taxes, and from the health care industry. It will pay for subsidized care for people not covered by employers, for financial help for businesses unable to cover employees and for public health programs such as AIDS and tuberculosis prevention and treatment.

On Sunday the House and Senate approved and sent a bill to Gov. Mike Lowry that would give state colleges and universities new authority over their own finances, tuition and the number of students they can admit.

The bill was approved 97-0 by the House

Trapped at Mudstock

The Latah County Sheriff's department declared a state of emergency Monday after several more Greenstock campers were bogged down by mud. A spokesperson said the county won't try to remove more vehicles or lay down gravel in the area until Thursday. Tammy Boston of WSU Student Affairs said the Latah County School District is taking people from the area to the Latah County Fairground by bus, and several WSU organizations such as ASWSU have sent members out to pick up stranded students and bring them back to the university.

Police receive second rape report in 4 days

Both victims are still undecided about pressing charges

By BARBARA LABOE

Daily Evergreen Staff

Another acquaintance rape of a WSU student was reported Sunday, the second attack reported in four days.

While both women have spoken to police, they have not yet decided whether to press charges, Pullman and University Police Department officials said.

"We have talked to the woman, but she does not wish to prosecute at this time," Lt. Mike Kenny of the University Police Department said about the rape reported Sunday.

The woman's mother reported the rape to police, but an officer has talked to the woman since the initial report, Kenny said.

"It doesn't sound like we are going to be able to follow through on this unless she changes her mind," Kenny said.

The woman who reported being raped early Thursday morning also is deciding whether she wants to go forward with the case, Sgt. Chris Tennant of the Pullman Police Department said.

"The victim has been somewhat reluctant to talk to police since the initial report, but right now we want to make sure she gets the help she needs dealing with this," Tennant said. "She has time to decide if she wants to press charges after she gets some help dealing with this."

Tennant said the police department always makes an effort to get rape victims in contact with a counseling or crisis group to deal with the effects of the rape.

"Regardless of the individual circumstances of the case, it is always a traumatic event, and we want to get them in touch with groups that can help them," he said.

Tennant said the police have the name of the suspect in the case and probably will be talking to him in the near future, after they speak to the woman again.

The Thursday and Sunday rapes were the sixth and seventh reported rapes of WSU students this school year, respectively, and the fourth and fifth reported acquaintance rapes.

The first reported rape was in September, followed by another in October and two in November.

The fifth rape was reported the first weekend after semester break.

WSU pays: Livengood admits more scrutiny needed in department

Price said although the calls to Carlson and Jones were probably business related, both men are personal friends, and he doesn't remember the content of the conversations.

The coach also charged a 61-minute call to Las Vegas in June; he says he has no idea who resides at that number. When the number was called, the woman who answered said she didn't have time to talk and didn't know anybody from WSU.

Questionable charges litter the 9,000 pages of calls accumulated by Business Services in the 10-month span.

Assistant football coach Bill Doba called his in-laws several times, including nine times in nine days in one stretch during May 1992, totaling more than $35.

In the same month, recruiting coordinator Phil Early called his wife in Bellingham 50 times for a total of more than $70, while she was in the process of moving to Pullman.

"I was told moving expenses would be taken care of," Early said.

Football graduate assistant Brian Lowe started making personal calls as soon as he arrived.

No one said he could use the cards for personal business nor was it implied, he said. But Lowe proceeded to charge nearly $300 in calls to his parents, friend Rochelle Rak and others in Pittsburg, including the almost $60 charged to Price's card by Lowe in the first two months he was on campus.

In those first calls were two to Rak on July 23, one starting at 1:28 a.m. and lasting 12 minutes, another at 2:34 a.m. and lasting an hour and six minutes. Together, the calls cost almost $20.

Price called those particular calls "inappropriate."

"You're going to find (the personal use of access numbers) in any company you look at," Lowe said. "For the hundreds of calls we make for the university, what am I supposed to do? Leave the office? Go back to my apartment and make the calls?"

When the use of a calling card or reimbursing the university was suggested, Lowe said, "Don't I still have the option to?"

Livengood responded to the same question of why he didn't reimburse the university by saying that he just didn't.

"One could argue that it (using the calling cards for personal use) is probably something we shouldn't do," he said. "I'm not as concerned about that because I don't think we have a blatant misuse of that. I think you do the things, and if you do the things with the right intentions in mind, everything is open to scrutiny."

"Quite honestly, I probably need to look at these closer," he said.
